

Maritime & Trade (MT)

Maritime transport is crucial to the world's economy as over 90% of the world's trade is carried by sea and it is the most cost-effective way to move goods and raw materials around the world. The inception of the containerization system in 1956 facilitated international trade and globalization.

Containers have standardized dimensions, and they can be loaded and unloaded, stacked, transported efficiently over long distances, and transferred from one mode of transport to another (container ships, rail transport flatcars, and semi-trailer trucks) without being opened.

Goods that travel in containers can vary, such as cars, apparel, electronic goods, and refrigerated cargo such as meats and fruits. Non-containerized vessels known as bulk carriers or tankers are specially designed to transport unpackaged bulk cargo, such as coal, cement, grains, and ore. Tankers are used to move large shipments of liquid cargo such as crude oil, liquid natural gas (LNG) and liquid petroleum gas (LPG). These vessels are designed to maximize capacity, safety, efficiency, and durability. Bulk vessels make up 15%-17% of the world's merchant fleets.
